- This architectural section drawing illustrates a large-scale building, likely a theater or concert hall, featuring a prominent tiered seating area (auditorium) on the left. The stage area is located at the bottom center, with a large, flat roof structure extending over it. The roof is supported by a series of vertical columns and includes a complex internal structure with a central vertical shaft. The drawing uses various colors (green, blue, grey) to distinguish different materials and structural elements, and includes detailed annotations for structural components and load paths.
